

Early childhood education, care pushed in Senate bill

By Gil Cebaguan

SEN. EDUARDO Angara has filed a bill that would start compulsory education as early as the toddler stage.

Angara's bill would ensure universal access to early childhood care and development programs to all Filipino children aged 3 to 6 years and officially recognize this stage as the first cycle of education. Angara believed that children should start from the early formative years to have a good foundation.

The bulk of the Senate committee on education said that the bill would adopt the "Early Years Act" produced by the United Nations on Education for All (EFA) which declared that "learning begins at birth...this calls for early childhood care and initial education."

Angara said the bill would also require the Department of Education to develop comprehensive early childhood care and education, especially for the most vulnerable and disadvantaged children.

The Senate University of the Philippines president said that his bill would address concerns that only one of every five Filipino children of approximately three million of the 13 million children belonging to the 0 to 6 years age group were provided early childhood care and development last year under programs provided in day-care centers and in public pre-schools.

Angara's counterpart bill in the House of Representatives was authored by Sen. Rogelio S. Sison, Jr., Davao Oriental Rep. Imelda R. Marcos, Iloilo Rep. Juan Edgardo Angara.

The bill called for the formation of the Early Childhood Care and Development Council (ECCD) to be composed of the representatives from the Department of Education, Department of Social Welfare and Development, National Science Council and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

Why many Filipinos are poor (2)

TO RECALL the first part of this topic, the World Bank's latest report on the economy, titled "The Philippines: Fostering More Inclusive Growth," named its analysis of growth in our country by saying, "Who are the poor, who are the characteristics of the poorest Filipinos?" The World Bank's answer: First, the poorest poor Filipinos belong to a large family of five members, second, they live in rural areas.

My first two-paragraph deal with the first part of the World Bank's latest population profile. It has two parts: one of the paper focuses on growth, the other on the social characteristics of the poor. I want to present a paper on the second part.

The country's population profile is itself a major factor causing rural poverty. Already by 2000, the country's population growth rate was 1.6 percent, the highest in the world. The country's population growth rate is itself a major factor causing rural poverty. Already by 2000, the country's population growth rate was 1.6 percent, the highest in the world.

But the report is flawed because it treated Philippine agriculture as one homogeneous industry, with no sub-sectors among the different types of crops. It is flawed because it treated Philippine agriculture as one homogeneous industry, with no sub-sectors among the different types of crops.

The sex life of the urban poor (1)

THEY'RE HERE, and I don't know why for the first time, I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor. I don't know why for the first time, I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor.

There was a debate at that time on family planning methods and reproductive health. I don't know why for the first time, I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor.

When I said that I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor, I don't know why for the first time, I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor.

"You know," she added, "you are the second person to say that. I don't know why for the first time, I have a problem with the sex life of the urban poor."

After she had introduced her personal life, she talked about her own experience and in effect on the sex life of the urban poor.

A new Asian security constellation

MY READER—Looking amidst the general mood of India and South Korea recently was to take a look at the "Asian security constellation." They are not alone in doing so, for across Asia, a new security architecture is being constructed, seemingly inevitable.

How Asia's geopolitical landscape will evolve over the coming decades is not easy to know. But it is apparent that an increasingly assertive China is a major factor in the new security constellation.

There are at least four possible Asian security constellations: (1) a new security constellation, (2) a new security constellation, (3) a new security constellation, (4) a new security constellation.

A second scenario is that the US remains Asia's principal security ally, with or without a third party. The emergence of a new security constellation is not inevitable.

Finally, Asia could evolve to be characterized by several competing powers: China, India, Japan, Korea, Indonesia and a strengthened US.

Of the four scenarios, the first has caused the greatest concern. China's neighbors are increasingly wary of its growing power and its assertiveness. While China leaders assert to be peaceful, its neighbors are increasingly wary of its growing power and its assertiveness.

In any case, China's power may be too vast and too fast to ignore. It is not only its economic power, but also its military power. It is not only its economic power, but also its military power.

SAN BEDA guard Jorge Hermida led the NCAA finals last season with a Mountain Dew, a headshot and a heavy dose.

With four straight ending games, Hermida came up with the perfect angle to the right, leading the Red Lions in a 90-71 rout of the San Sebastian Stags in the west of the finals at the Araneta Coliseum.

The winning shot, taken from below 10 feet, was put the Lions, who were a three-point edge in the final, on the brink of a perfect season.

Game 2 is on Friday at the Big Dome. "I thought about that last year and it was my motivation to do more," said Hermida. "But I didn't want to lose this physically. I just wanted to play my game."

The Lions' Hermida had been the Stags in different ways, finishing with 18 points, 12 rebounds, four assists and three steals in a well-attended effort that drew more than his much friendlier fan.

"I'm going to be tough," said Hermida of his most important goal. "Sometimes I have to tell him to stop."

San Beda also scored on the rebound of the junior center as MVP Racer Arneson talked to him, 10 points, 10 rebounds and nine assists in carrying the Stags past the Lions, 49-46, in the first game.

Playing in his final season for the Lions, Hermida pushed a 14-2 run to seal the third period and the Lions, with their season high score, scored from down.

"We played excellent basketball," said Hermida. "We followed the game plan. We were patient on defense. It all added up to making sure we were able to do that."

CHEF Olivier Rodriguez

Mandarin Oriental brings in Michelin-star chef

By Norma Chibano
Liaison

THE COUNTRY where he is cooking is of little consequence. Whether he's in his native France, in Italy or Japan, it's all about techniques for Chef Olivier Rodriguez, specifically about French techniques.

It's the application of these techniques that has helped him earn the coveted Michelin stars for the various restaurants where he has worked.

The Signature Restaurant at the Mandarin Oriental Tokyo has been awarded one Michelin star every year since 2008. Le Chateau de Saint-Sauveur in Nice, where he worked from 1992 to 1999, has two Michelin stars, while Les Jardins de l'Esplanade in Toulouse has three Michelin stars, as does the famous restaurant in Florence, Italy.

But while he uses traditional French techniques, Chef Olivier describes his cuisine as modern, as long as it is light. He doesn't use butter and cream excessively, for instance, using it when only when necessary. "I can make nice tastes and textures without using too much butter and cream," he says.

Fish and scallops

And then, too, there's his passion for cooking with fresh, seasonal ingredients. The seasons and the abundance determine their being, he says, inspire him to create the dishes in his menu.

Fish and scallops are two of his favorite ingredients and he loves using them, especially, like grass and mushrooms in a bowl.

"When I create, I make a good balance for the customer," he says. There must be a counterpart between the flavors, textures and colors of each dish.

"I use a maximum of three main ingredients to create a complete dish, with each ingredient supporting the others. Other ele-

But apart from the options that will make you spend the whole day at this bay-side mall, we also offer ideas and items that will make home life so much easier and brighter.

We have also been consistent in delivering lifestyle activities like no other and this October, we're inviting you to an exclusive event featuring a Chinese-American woman whose passion for the native and immigrant flavors of China has spurred the publication of three books on the subject and has made her name in the contemporary culinary scene.

Grace Young: Reigniting the Fire of the Wok

This week a beautiful and versatile cooking vessel that is almost synonymous to the art of Chinese cooking, and also the signature of Chinese-Americans in their homes, the wok is back. The author of three books on Chinese cuisine and the wok have reconnected thousands of Chinese expatriates in homes far from home to the wok, the symbol of the Chinese kitchen, reconnected the mix of Chinese and American culture of her childhood, as well as the stories of others who had wandered far from the mainland. This massive effort in culinary literature has earned the MCP (Le Cordon Bleu International Cookbook Award, the James Beard World International Cookbook Award, and a finalist spot in the MCP Food Cookbook Awards.

Her latest book, Stir-Frying to the Sky's Edge, on the other hand, was awarded the MCP Culinary Arts & Letters Culinary Journal Independent Study Scholarship. Through which Grace was able to research on stir-frying culture among the Chinese communities in Peru, Jamaica, Burma, Malaysia, Singapore, Vietnam, Mexico, India, Indonesia, South Africa, Libya, and the Mississippi Delta.

Debuted as a "great fountain of the wok" by acclaimed food historian Amy Besa, Grace continues to take the art of wok cooking to a new level—one where we can reconnect the past of our ancestors to our modern kitchens. Staying true to the age-old Chinese expression that says "one wok sums to the day's edge," Grace proves that the cook who uses the wok remains master of the cooking world.

Learn more about the wonders and delights of Chinese kitchens, cherished recipes, and heartwarming stories through a special cooking demo by Grace Young at the Main Mall Atrium.

Spicy crab dish for spicy weekend

STEP BY STEP

By Virginia Baga-Reyes

CRAB-EATERS WILL enjoy this Singaporean Chili Crab recipe, which is either a pantry addition or your holiday reprieve as a perfect dish to spice up any weekend treat.

This crab's delicious secret is in the sauce, combining garlic, ginger, warm puree, cream sauce with tomato oil, heat and chili sauce. The crab is coated in a thick, aromatic, pungent sauce and topped with long-sliced green onions.

"Crabs should be fresh and alive right up to cooking," says chef Justin Rodriguez, kitchen manager of The Red Crab All-You-Can-Eat House (1104 20th Bldg., 3rd, Delgado St., Santa Monica, QC, call 4734033 and 2744005). "It's best to live until the crab is hot and still it's best-cooked to remove the human (fishy) odor."

This crab recipe has just the right amount of spice for Pinoy who are not too keen on extremely hot dishes. But, it's still a personal preference on how spicy you want your crab sauce to be. You can liberally add more spicy habanero.

In buying crabs, pick those that feel heavy for their size. Crabs should smell like fresh; they should look bright and clean. The most of the female crab is usually preferred, as it has more flesh than that of male crabs. Male crabs can be distinguished from female crabs by the smaller tail flap or their underbelly. Crabs are of-
